ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is the product of my fascination with food and Margaret Atwood's fiction.

I would like to thank the following: to the ELOPE: English Language Overseas Perspectives and Enquiries and Eger Journal of English Studies for their kind permission to reuse and update the material that appears first as articles in "Testimonies in The Testaments by Margaret Atwood: Images of Food in Gilead." ELOPE: English Language Overseas Perspectives and Enquiries. 17.1 (2020): 97–110 and "Paradise Redesigned: Post-Apocalyptic Visions of Urban and Rural Spaces in Margaret Atwood's Maddaddam Trilogy." Eger Journal of English Studies XIII (2013): 27–36. The first time I wrote about food in Margaret Atwood's fiction was in my article "Cooking and Eating Your Own Stories: (Metaphorical) Cannibalism in Margaret Atwood's The Robber Bride." Zeitschrift für Anglistik und Amerikanistik. 65.4 (2017): 413–427.

I owe thanks to the Faculty of Arts and Letters at the Catholic University in Ruzomberok for providing me with a publishing grant. I am grateful to the many friends, students and colleagues who have encouraged me in my work on Margaret Atwood. A huge debt of gratitude is due to Roger Heyes for his help and support during the development of this textbook.

Finally, my best thanks as always to Pavol and Jakub.
